It is said that 3000 seamen have been impressed in the northern ports within these sew days; this is the chief cause of the very rapid and uncommon rise of coals.

It is faid, that when the Marquis de Bouille took possessions, which he found a mere heap of ruins; he was surprised at the sight, and turning to Brigadier-General Fraser, who accompanied him, asked him by what means the works had been so completely destroyed? The General replied, "By your bombs, Sir." The Marquis, with astonishment, exclaimed, "Sure, my bombs could not have done all this mischief." But he had no soon uttered the words, than he selt burt at his own inadvertence; for he found that the General was shocked with the recollection, that all the mischief had been done by the English bombs, which the Marquis had found at the foot of Brimttone Hill.

However deserving centure in other respects, candour must acquit the late Ministry of what they have been accorded of by passion and prejudice. They have been charged with throwing obstructions in the way of a peace with the Dutch; whereas it is a fact too stubborn to admit of a contradiction, that the difficulty experienced in negociating a treaty with the States of Holland, is to be wholly afcribed to the machinations of the Court of France.

A correspondent disapproves of the proposed enquiry into the flate of the nation, because it will be giving our enemies infor-mation, which, if transmitted by a private individual, would render him liable to the forfeiture of his life. Since it is avowed, that this enquiry is meant to include every particular relating to our paval and military affairs, will not the necessity of spies being employed by foreign powers be entirely superfeded? And is not there a man now in custody, on a positive accusation of treason, for doing impeffectly, and upon a contracted scale, that identical business which it is designed to execore in a complete manner, and upon a plan of infinitely greater extent ?

Admiralty-Office, May 4, 1782. Extract of a letter from the Honourable Captain Frederick Maitland, of his Majesty's ship the Queen, to MIr, Stebbens, dated off the Start, April 28.

BEG you will communicate to their Lordships, that, on Sunday morning the 21ft inftant, Commodore Elliot made our fignal, about ten o'clock, to affift the Fondroyant and her prize, as it then blowed very hard. So foon as the weather permitted, I took every expeditious method to thift the prisoners, and to refit her; and by nine o'clock next morning we had taken out above 300 prisoners, and fent an officer and 40 men, in addition to the officer and to men put on board by Captain Jervis; about which time we discovered a large ship to the southward, standing to the S. W. upon a wind. I could soon perceive the was not an English man of war, and the French officers affured me the was the Protecteur, of 74 guns. I immediately ordered the Pegalus, together with one of the cut-ters that was in company, to make the best of their way for the first convenient port in England, and made sail towards the strange ship, which, after a chace of fourteen hours, we came up with in the night, and took, upon firing one broadfide, (ftill fuppoling her to be the Protecteur) and he only fired his guns, and ftruck his colours. On fending a boat on board, I found her to be the Actionnaire, of 64 guns, armée en flute, com-manded by Monf. de Querengal, Knight of the order of St manded by Mont de Querenga, Kinght of the order of St. Louis, with 250 feamen, and 550 foldiers on board, of which pine were killed and fifteen wounded, bound from Breft to the Isle of France. We find she has a great quantity of naval and ordnance stores on board, besides provisions, wine, and rum, together with eleven chefts of money. When we were in chace, the Latona frigate appeared to windward, and made the private figual; but, being disabled in her masts, it was next morning before the joined us. I now had 1100 prisoners to manage, and therefore took the liberty to detain her hours, to affilt in shifting the prisoners, and to take on board 150 of them. Captain Conway then parted company.

In justice to my officers and ship's company, I cannot omit saying, that they discovered a very high degree of ardour and fpirit in coming up with the enemy, and, during the whole of this affair, behaved in such a manner as merits my esteem and

HOUSE or COMMONS, Friday, May 3. Mr FOX reported his Majesty's answer to the address of thanks of

The bill for restraining Sir Thomas Rumbold and Mr Perryn from

The bill for restraining Sir Thomas numbers and the support and the singdom, being then committed,

The Lord Advocate observed, that the framers of it had adhered as closely as possible to that which had been brought in for locking up the estates of the persons concerned in the South-Sea Company scheme; but as there was some difference between the present case, and that of the contries concerned in the South-Sea, he sound himself obliged to the parties concerned in the South-Sea, he found himfelf obliged for propose a necessary clause to it. In the one case, the property of the persons, who were the objects of the bill, lay all in England; in the present case, a part of it was probably in India. In order therefore to discover this, he moved for leave to bring in a clause, which should compact the parties to deliver in a present of the case. difcover this, he moved for leave to bring in a clause, which should compel the parties to deliver in an account of their property upon oath, to the Chief Baron of the Exchequer; and to authorise the Mayor's Court at Calcutta to examine people upon oath touching the sime; and, as a reward to those who should discover any concealed effects, he proposed to allow them 9l. per cent. on all they should discover. Leave being given to bring up the clause, and the Chairman having read it.

Sir Thomas Rumbold objected to the clause, as subjecting him to very uncommon hardships. The bill before them in the Committee, he claid a panishment as it went to lock up his pro-uncommon narcings. The bill before them in the Committee, he faid, might well be called a punishment, as it went to lock up his property, and prevent him from alienating any part of it, if he should stand in need of it: It went also to compel him to give an account upon oath, of all he was worth in the world; this surely was a punishment, we he had not been emitted to the world. ment; yet he had not been permitted to make any defence to avert it.

This might be called justice; but be could not call that justice, which This might be called juitice; but be could not call that juitlice, which inflicted punishment on a man before he had been heard in his defence. He laid his claim therefore to a hearing, and faild he would prefent a retition, praying to be heard by his counfel against the bill. There was another thing on which he thought it necessary to say a few words: It had been industriously reported abroad, that a great part of his property lay in foreign funds; he most folemuly declared, that he had not the property of the property fixpenny-worth of property in Europe, except in Great Britain; nor had he any property in China, as fome people imagined; there was fome in India; but when he should give in his account upon oath, the House would find that his wealth had been greatly exaggerated. As the whole of his property therefore lay within the dominions of Great Britain, there could be no occasion for imposing upon him conditions that would subject him to perpetual imposionment. He was to be bound in too cool, not to leave the kinedom and to find the second to be and to be a second to be in 100,000 L not to leave the kingdom; and to find two furcties in 30,000 L each. With respect to the sum in which he was himself to be bound, he had no objection to it; he did not care if it was greater; but prejudices having been raifed against him, he could not find two persons who would be bound for him in the sum demanded of them; persons who would be bound for him in the sun demanded of them; because his property being in so very precarious a situation, it was not in his power to indemnify them. And indeed, when he considered that the House knew he was possessed as very considerable real estate in this kingdom, which, were he so inclined, he could not at present alienate; he could not but think that he was hardly dealt by, as it could not be supposed that he would renounce his property, and his courtry, as he had no reason to think, that though he should even be found guilty of the charges brought against him, the reconstruction oilty of the charges brought against him, the pecuniary punishment hat might be laid upon him would come up to any thing near the value of his real estates. A rumour had indeed been spread, that he loaded not abide the decision of the law; but the reasons he had just n would be a fusicient answer to such a report. He concluded, by given would be a sufficient answer to such a report. He concluded, by urging his claim to be heard by counsel against the bill.

The Lord Advocate said, he was sorry he must oppose this claim: If the Honourable Mersher had a right to be heard now, all the preceding steps had been wrong; if they were right, it was not yet time for him to be heard; that time would come when the bill should be read the second time. As to the report that the Honourable Bursher intended to say from justine; he really did not believe it; and he had told all who had mentioned it to him, that he had not seen one symptom to induce him to believe it. With regard to the two sureties in 50,000 l. each, be had no objection to make an afteration on that head; and to look only for sive securities; in 50,000 l. each; he knew that the Honourable Member had such relations and connections, that he could not be at a log for such sureties; the security looked for was that the Honourable Member had such relations and connections, that he could not be at a loss for such surveius; the security looked for was not that the money should be paid, but that the Henourable Baroact would not sly from justice: It was a point of honour on one side, and of confidence on the other; and those, who could put confidence in his bonour, could sive no objection to become bound for his appearance. As to hearing his defence in the present stage, it would be contrary to the precedent in the South Sea case, which the framers of the present will had the slick content. trary to the precedent in the So present bill had strictly copied.

Sir Thomas Rumbold maintained, that the cases were by no means parallel; as in the one, the perions concerned had, in their petition to the House of Lords, acknowledged their guilt; whereas he, on the contrary, flood upon his defence, and maintained his innocence. He was forry the House did not seem inclined to remain fatisfied with his over perions ferritter, as he really did not know, in his prefent finanown personal fecurity; as he really did not know, in his present stant tion, how to ask any friend to be bound for him. However, comwhat would, he defired it might be understood that he protested a what would, he delired it might be underthood that he proteined against the bill, and pleaded not guilty. The Committee then went through the bill, to be reported on Monday.

Mr Alderman Willers next rose, and, after a short presace, made his annual motion for expunging the resolution of the 15th of February 1769, relative to the Middlesex election.

abound motion for expunging the resolution of the 15th of remainy 1769, relative to the Middlefex election.

Mr. Byag feconded the motion.

Mr. Ex faid the opposed it not from any false pride, or fear of being thought inconfighent; but he had turned the queition frequently in his mind, and was full considered that the refolution gentlemen wanted to expunge was founded on right principles: It was for the good of the people of Biogland that the House thould have a power of expelling any man whom they thought of worthy of fitting among them. This was a privilege too valuable to be given up. He supposed some cases in which its public utility would be acknowledged: If the bill for excluding contractors from seats in that House, had been rejected in the other, and the House of Commons should come to a resolution of their own, that the House of Commons should come to a resolution of their own, that no person holding a contract should sit amongst them, the present con-tractors, on losing their seats, might be re-elected, and if not preventtractors, on losing their feats, might be re-elected, and it not prevented by this inherent privilege of the House to expel, might be returned again. However, though he opposed the motion, he felt very little anxiety for the event of the questions, for when he found the voice of the people was against the privilege, which he believed was the present case, he would not make use of the privilege against the people. He did not think it of much consequence likewise to retain the privilege, when the power to enforce it was gone. The power was now undoubt-edly gone; for gentlemen might remember, that when two members of that House, as Magistrates of London, had grofsly violated the privithat House, as Magistrates of London, had grofaly violated the privi-lege, the natural pointhment ought to have been expulsion: But the House being afraid to proceed to that length, the public no longer ac-knowledged the privilege; they had affociated, they had declared their such the privilege; and had taught Parliament to liften to the voice of their conflictments. The mere expunging of the resolution, how-ever, would not be of any great use; the dostrine would remain just as before; unless a bill should be brought in, to put the matter beyond all different

The Lord Advocate also opposed the motion, but spoke principally to Mr Fox's idea of excluding any one from a feat in that House by a mere resolution of the House, and without the concurrence of the other branches of the Legislature : Such a resolution, he said, would be contrary to all law, and to the very spirit of the constitution, according to which no one ought to be deprived of his franchise but by law. He animadverted also so the doctrine of associations, which he condemned as dangerous to the last degree. It ten or twelve gentlemen, he faid, should affectate, why not ten thousand; and God only knew where such affociations would end. That House had seen an affociation of 20,000 men, with blue cockades, and their excelles were too well remembered. In a word, from fisch meetings confusion must arise, and from confusion tyranny and desputish would spring up.

Lord Mahon, Lord Surrey, Sir P. Clerke, and the Secretary at War, spoke for the motion: At last the House divided, when there appeared, Lord Surrey afterwards gave notice, that on Friday next he would move for a committee to take into consideration the pensions granted between the 1sth of Estruary, and the 30th of April last; and Mr Byng said, that he though particularly animadvert on the pension granted during that period to a member of the other House (Lord Loughborough),—Adjourned.

From the London Papers, May 4.

We can affure our readers, that the new administration are not without very farguine expectations of being able to effect a general pacification on terms perfectly honourable to this country. - Immediately on their accession to their new dignities, two gentlemen, Meff. Ofwald and Whitford, both formerly refident in America, and gentlemen of the most respectable characters, were dispatched to Paris, to confer with Dr Franklin, on the subject of a partial negociation on the part of America only.—The answer given by the Doctor was direct and peremptory, that the United Colonies would most affuredly listen to no proposals tending to a peace, which did not include France and the other belligerent powers as parties. He at the fame time infinuated, that on these terms, and on the most unqualified admission of American independence, probably none of the powers at war would have much objection to a peace, nor did he suppose that an ungenerous depression of Great Britain would be much insisted upon. Mr Oswald and Mr Whitford delivered this reply to administration, and two other gentlemen have been fince fent over with more enlarged instructions, and with a power of obviating most of the objections that had been preflarted.

By advices from Portsmouth, dated May 3, we learn, that Admiral Kempenfelt has hoisted his flag on board the Royal George, and has proceeded with the following ships under his command to cruize off Brest, with a view to intercept their St

Domingo fleet, lately failed from Ferrol. Guns. Commanders. Adm. Kempenfelt, Adm. Kempenreit, Captain Waghouse, Royal George 100 Bellona Captain Onflow, Captain Phipps, Courageux Fortitude Captain Keppel Goliah -Captain Sir Hyde Parker, Samplon Captain Harvey, Captain Douglas, 64 Monfieux onfieur 36 Captain Finch.

A letter from, Portsmouth, dated May 1, from an officer in Admiral Barrington's fleet, fays, " We are all in the greatest bustle imaginable: some intelligence of consequence has been received at the Admiralty, and we have orders to proceed to proceed to fea with the greatest expedition I date by we that fail about Sunday. Various are the reports about the object of our pursuit, but we understand it to be the horneward bound St Domingo fleet, and some Dutch East-Indiamen. We expect Lord Howe here to-morrow, to take the command. From our late success, we are all in the greatest spirits; and I trust, from the unanimity that appears throughout the navy, we shall be able to give you a good account of the enemy in a few days.

The Courageux and Raifonable are fitting with the utnoth difpatch, which we conceive are intended for the West-Indies. We shall have in all about fifteen fail of the line, and eight frigates, belides a few smaller ships."

If we may believe the accounts from France, another fleet of transports than the two already disperfed by the Admirals Barrington and Kempenfelt, is collecting at Breft, in order to fail with stores, &c. for the East Indies. But as those brave officers are still in the service, and the management of affairs is in the hands of ministers who do not feen likely to slumber over their employments; if this third fleet should venture out, there is little reason to fear but we shall be able to give as good an account of it as we did of the the two former,

The following is an account of the cargoes of part of the French prizes, lately taken by the squandron under Admiral Barrington:

L'Amphion, Sven Maijborn master, burthen about 700 tons, laden with iron and copper kettles, coals, nails, wine, brandy, vinegar, pork, medicines, and other merchandize, together with two cases containing 14,400 livres, and a barrel containing 2000 dollars.

Villa Nova, Andres Hoog master, burthen about 260 tons, laden with provisions, wine, brandy, and other merchandize.

Le Superbe, Matthew Collisson master, burthen about root tons, laden with bombs, iron balls, mooring chains, wine, beef, pork, flour, cables, and cordage.

La Lionne, Duchart mafter, burthen about 550 tons, laden with provisions, soap, oil, candles, cordage; about 3000 four ound cannon balls, and 237 foldiers... Le Duc de Chartres, Jean Baptista, Louis L'Ecolier ma-fter, burthen about 360 tons, laden with gunpowder, cordage, muskets, iron, provisions, brandy, wine, bale goods, and other merchandize.

La Bellona, Pirree Scolan master, burthen about 400 tons, laden with cordage, provisions, wine, brandy, 5800 four pound cannon balls, 35 chefts of mulkets, and 152 foldiers. The particulars of the others are not yet come to harid.

It is somewhat remarkable, that Monsieur l'Aurne and the officers of the regiment d'Acquitane, who were taken by Admiral Kempenfelt last December, on their voyage to the East-Indies, are now taken once more in l'Actionnaire; and one of the Captains of the captured transports has been fix times taken, and thrice shipwrecked during the present war.
The storeships that went out with Commodore Johnstone are all fafe arrived at their places of deffination. The St Car-los, Porpus, Manilla, and Myrtle, were fafe at Bombay in November laft. The Load Advocate of Scotland, we are informed, is going out to India with very enlarged powers. Yesterday Lord Estingham reported to the House of Peers, that his Majesty had been waited upon with their Lordships, address of Thursday last, and that he was pleased to return a molt gracious, answer.

Yelterday, Mr Secretary Fox reported to the House of Commons, that his Majesty had been waited upon with the address of that House of Thursday last, and that he was pleafed to give a most gracious answer thereto.

Fresh orders were yesterday issued by the Treasury, to the officers of the several departments intended to be abolished, to deliver in their bills to the Treasury up to Lady-day last, in order that they may be immediately disbursed .- Amongst others included in this last sweep, were the Lords of Police in Scotland, the Paymatter of the Pentions, and Surveyor of the Board of Works.

The following is the junto against shole in power, Mr Jen-kinson, Mr Eliis, Mr Rigby, Lord Denbigh, and Lord Stormont; these have meetings very often at each others houses, and the plan is to watch favourable opportunities, and advise the K. how to manage the C. in fuch a manner as to promote the great object—division.

The new arrangement talked of, is the following:

Duke of Grafton, First Lord of the Admiralty. Lord Ashburton, Chancellor. Mr Burke, Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Lord Gower, President of the Council.

It is faid that Mr Byng will very foon be created a Baronet. The Sovereign faw his late Ministers losing all his dominions abroad, and he is now comforted with the prospect of the present men destroying all his power at home.

There is so general a want of naval stores at the Cape and Mauritius, that the capture of the last outward bound East India fleet will reduce the Franch fleet in the Afiaris feat to the greatest extremity imaginable, especially as there are no neptral fettlements in those parts that can furnish them with the least supply.

Yesterday sixteen bills received the Royal assent, by virtue of a commission under the Great Seal for that purpose; amongst which are the following:

The bill for quartering the Hellian troops coming from Minorca—the Militia Pay Bill—the Greenland Fishery Bill—the Bill for the Involment of Deeds and Wills of Papits the Bill relative to East-India goods—the Bill relative to ran-foming ships—and the Bill for the more speedy recovery of Small Debts in the town of Rochester.

The Danes pocket a loss by the war with the Dutch. Every vessel that passes the Sound pays a duty or tribute to the King of Denmark; now as there has been a falling off from the Dutch ships, from 500 to 11, so of course the Sound-gelt has fallen in the same proportion. The trade, indeed, of the Danes has not decreased, for they carry their own stores to the different belligerent powers; but the trade itself has not encreafed; and the shipping of Denmark, in point of tonnage, is still the same; so that the Danes do not gain one way, what they lofe in another; and therefore the part of the revenue arifing from the Sound-gelt, usually paid by the Dutch, is a pure loss to the Danes; for if the receipts at the Customhouse in the Sound continue to be the same as usual, that part which used to be paid by the Dutch, is now paid by the Danish ships, and is therefore levied on the Danes themselves. This is one of the happy confequences that Denmark feels from the freaty of Armed Neutrality.

The Dutch were formerly supplied with coals from Newcaftle and Sunderland, but they are now exceedingly diffreffed for want of fuel, which bears a most extravagant price in the different provinces of Holland.

"On the 19th of this month, a cutter privateer appeared off this harbour, and most effectually and completely blocked it up for the space of three days, taking and ransoming every ressel that came in sight. Notice was sent to the naval commanding officer, who could do nothing, as there was no fri-gate or cutter which be could fend out; the two frigates which were in the harbour, were as convoy to an outward-bound fleet, and the Lennox was too large and heavy to do any thing. She fired at and took a veffel just under Mr Rocke of Trabolgan's house. On the 16th of March, a privateer engaged two Liverpool-men, that were going to join the West-India fleet, which had the day before failed from Cork, and took them both, just opposite the harbour. The engagement began at nine o'clock at night, and lasted till twelve, during which me, nor afterwards, did any veffel go to their affiftance, al lough two frigates and a tender were in the harbour, and the wind strong at north. Notice of the engagement was fent to all the batteries, but as the wind was too high for a boat to go to the men of war, and no fignals established, they could do bothing but act as spectators. The following VERSES were spoken by Miss Kirby at her Benefit, on Saturday last.

I Verse be fiction, it ill suits the heart,
That feels with gratitude, devoid of art. No words can paint or pay the tribute due, For that protection I've receiv'd from you. A firanger here, I ventur'd far from home, Nor vainly fought an hospitable dome; For foon I found the truth of common fame, That kindnels here is not an empty name-Nor praise to real merit e'er deny'd, Or merit—tho' by industry supply'd. My conflant care to gain your kind applause, Has sav'd me from the lash of Critic laws. 'Tis your's at once to be humanely brave, To hield the stranger, or a country fave. Let Britain's foes but menace war's alarms, And Calcdonia's fwains are up in arms: The peaceful cottage, and the joys it yields, Its owner foon foregoes for tented fields. But, ah! this fatal war!—I grieve to fay— But, ah! this fatal war!—I grieve to fay— Has fwept too many of your fons away. Frafer foon fell! Death flopt his hold career— The field was holl—yet laurels crown'd his bler. The gallant Maithand next e'en death defy'd, Came, faw, and compuer'd,—then ferenely dy'd. Peace to their manes!—hallow'd be the feat, Where these great foldlers found their last retreat For the no fulptur'd frome point where they're laid, Their country knows the facrifice they made. This tribute to their memory is giv'n— But deeds like their's are register'd in heav'n. Are thefe the fruits of war? Ah, let it ceafe! For civil discord, give us smiling peace. The gladening sound inakes every heart expand; Your heroes soon shall tread their native land: And we who move in this our humble fphere, E'en we-shall feel the genial influence here.-This fond digreffion kindly you'll excuse.

A theme which might employ the noblest Muse;

"Tis mine t'express what first I had in view, The ardent gratitude I owe to you-That gratitude, which neither time nor place Can ever from this glowing breast efface.
